REDFIELD BUILDING REDEVELOPMENT

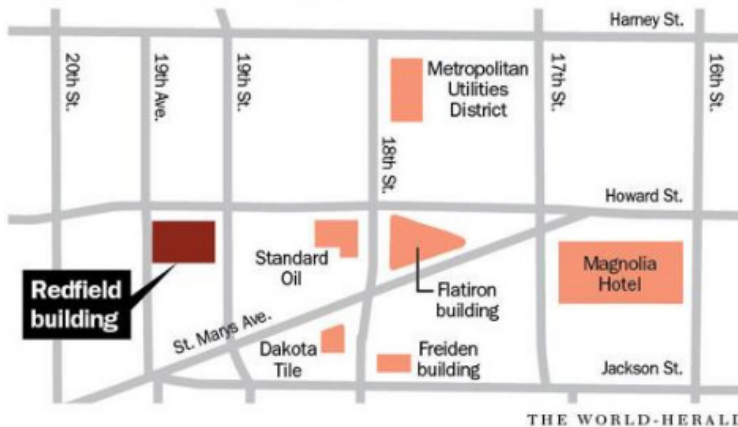

HISTORY

Once housing the state's largest Buick dealership, the 100 year-old Redfield Building is up for National Historic Status. The 47,872 SF building sits at the southwest corner of Howard Street and South 19th Street, and will undergo a $15 million rehabilitation project. The project will preserve the historic flair of the building, restoring the original features such as the huge glass windows, tulip-shaped pillars, decorative interior tile, and exterior Terra cotta. The revamped Redfield Building will reopen in March or April of 2020.

The site is in the emerging Flatiron District, also being redeveloped. Micro apartments at the Frieden Building opened in July and the Standard Oil (Law Building) at 18th and Harney is set to be renovated into apartments and a high-end restaurant. Construction is anticipated to start in December and completed by December 2020. Retailers and shops are also planned for the area.

THE FLATIRON DISTRICT

Bounded generally by 17th, 20th, Howard and St. Mary's Avenue, the emerging district is getting a boost from a proposed rehab of the Redfield Building. Other future redevelopment sites are at 500 S. 18th St., 1801 St. Mary's Ave., and 563 S. 18th St.

“ For a lot of reasons, this building stood out — the architectural style, the views, the location. ”

-Neeraj Agarwal, one of the new owners and developer of the project.

FIRST FLOOR - OPEN CONCEPT RETAIL/COFFEE SHOP 1,724 SF

In the early days of the Redfield Building, the first floor served as the main showroom for the Buick dealership. This secondary tenant space will be an open concept, perfect for a retail space and coffee shop/cafe.

Developers plan to expose the original decorative floor and wall tile. A glass wall is planned to separate the space from the larger restaurant also planned for the first floor. A secondary entrance will be developed in the alley on the east end of the building for deliveries from vendors of a prospective coffee, restaurant or retail user.
