Taylor, Texas, a city with a population of 19,000, sits on the outskirts of the state's capital city in Central Texas—just 20 minutes away from Samsung's existing semiconductor facility in Austin.

With a small-town identity and rich history that dates to the late 19th century, the city has a reputation for its live music, artisan crafts, world-class barbeque and beautiful parks.

Taylor is located in Williamson County.

Although the atmosphere is that of a cozy small town, Taylor's flourishing economy is due in large part to a booming business scene.

More than 60 companies expanded or relocated to the city just last year, and with more developments in the works, Taylor is well-positioned for an even stronger future.
